0101  12:00 PM – 2:30 PM Humphrey Museum

CSCA 2007 PRE-CONFERENCE
BRINGING SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY TO THE PUBLIC:
AN OFF-SITE CONFERENCE EXPLORATION OF THE HUMPHREY MUSEUM

Sponsor: CSCA Second Vice President, Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule
Note: $5 transportation fee. Attendees must pre-register by March 15.
Chair: Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule, Bethel College

Time:
12:00 noon Meet at the conference hotel lobby for transportation
12:30 – 2:30 pm Session
2:30 pm Leave for hotel

The Humphrey Institute is a world-renown school of public affairs that is recognized for its role in examining public issues and shaping public policy at local, state, national, and international levels and providing training for leadership and management expertise. This pre-conference opportunity allows participants to visit the Humphrey Museum which showcases the contributions of important politicians in government, politics, their commitment to social action and responsibility, as well as provides a glimpse into their personal lives. Participants will have the opportunity to view the museum and participate in a presentation and discussion of how the museum communicates the role of politicians in shaping public policy. An interactive simulation will show the interaction of special interest groups as policy is being developed.

SHORT COURSE
THE “GRAPHIC NOVEL” AND NEW STRATEGIES FOR TEACHING COMMUNICATION

Sponsor: CSCA President, Deanna Sellnow
Note: $20 fee. Attendees must pre-register by March 12.
Facilitators: David Beard, University of Minnesota, Duluth
Katelyn Vo Thi-Beard, University of Wisconsin-Madison
Eden Leon, University of Minnesota, Duluth
Joey Erickson, University of Minnesota, Duluth

Comic books are on everyone’s mind, and are a great tool to reach students of all levels. Join us to see how the adventures of Superman, the Holocaust memoirs like Maus, the new comics journalism of Joe Sacco’s Palestine, the Iranian autobiography Persepolis and Japanese Manga can be used to teach concepts in public speaking, rhetoric, intercultural communication and new media communication. Students will leave with an understanding of the unique features of this new medium and a set of lesson plans for integrating graphic novels into their courses.

0301  3:00 PM – 6:00 PM Lake Calhoun

SHORT COURSE
ON BECOMING SOUND LITERATE WOMEN: INTRODUCTION TO THE SONIC REALM OF DIGITAL STORYTELLING, SOUNDSCAPES, AND PERSONAL VOICE PERFORMANCE
The first women’s music club in Minneapolis began in 1892, before the turn of the 20th century. Beyond such traditional music performance, women reside within a much larger sonic arena that intersects social and personal space. In the early 1900s, experimental theorists opened the concept of “composition” to include the organization of the very sounds that surround us. Voice, machine and nature all contribute to our daily sound manifesto, and to some extent sound is gendered. More than a century after the debut of the Lorelei Club, this session invites women on a sound adventure that contextualizes voice as personal narrative within a social space of sound. This short course is intended as an introductory session on digital audio storytelling and sound literacy. The context behind the voice is explored, with a keen interest toward sound preservation within natural and urban spaces. Participants will learn to experience deep listening and then collectively record and construct a soundscape that accentuates the social and personal geographies of women. Best practices in sound making and the creation of audio learning objects will be discussed as well.

SHORT COURSE:
WORK THAT WORKS: APPLYING CRITICAL THINKING IN THE CLASSROOM AND ON THE JOB FOR SUCCESS

Students need to be able to make a connection between what they do in the classroom and what they will do on the job. Critical thinking can help foster that connection. Through critical thinking, students learn how to learn and thus become more aware and responsible for their learning and the decisions they make.

In this short course participants will learn a comprehensive, cross-disciplinary model of critical thinking. The model provides a simple vocabulary that faculty and students can use in the classroom and on the job. Critical thinking improves the quality of instruction, interaction, and learning dramatically. The presenters will delineate and demonstrate the application of the model to assignments or activities in a class. At the conclusion, we will discuss how to overcome the inevitable obstacles that impede our progress.

ARE WE MAKING A DIFFERENCE? CREATING A SITE FOR DIALOGUE ABOUT ASSISTANT BASIC COURSE DIRECTORS AND THE QUALITY OF OUR EVALUATIONS

Sponsor: Basic Course
Chair: Nicole J. Schultz, Bowling Green State University

Participants:
Nicole J. Schultz, Bowling Green State University
Kristen McIntyre, University of Arkansas at Little Rock
Jennifer Walton, Ohio Northern University
Aaron Burton, Bowling Green State University
Zack Frohlich, Tarrant County College-Northwest Campus

Assistant basic course directors (ABCDs) play an important role in supporting basic course directors’ administrative, curriculum, and pedagogical development efforts. However, evaluation practices for ABCD performance is not often discussed. The purpose of this panel is to engage in dialogue about the ways in which ABCDs are (or should be) held accountable for their professional and social responsibilities as assistant administrators. This will be an interactive session where experiences and suggestions regarding evaluation/feedback practices of ABCDs can be shared.

IN SICKNESS AND IN HEALTH UNTO DEATH DO US PART: AN EXPLORATION OF HEALTH ISSUES RANGING FROM ACUTE ILLNESS TO DEATH

Sponsor: Health Communication
Chair: Sheryl Lidzy, Emporia State University

Participants:
Stephen M. Croucher, Bowling Green State University
Amy Agyeman, Longwood University and Young Stroke, Inc.
Donna R. Pawlowski, Creighton University
Lisa Bradford, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee
Paige W. Toller, University of Nebraska at Omaha

This panel of scholars will explore the health issues encountered by individuals and families that are not easily resolved, and in some cases, impossible to cure. Panelists will discuss their research and contributions in the areas of HIV/AIDS, stroke recovery and familial communication, and ministry counseling with issues related to death and dying. After presenting their ideas, panelists will open the discussion to include audience members to discuss how we can continue research efforts in these avenues and how we can continue to help individuals coping with such health-related issues.

RE-INTRODUCING THE CONCEPT OF CIVILITY IN THE CLASSROOM

Sponsor: Community College
Chair: Brent Goken, Illinois Central College

Participants:
Debbie Hedeman, Illinois Central College
Ron Howell, Illinois Central College
Ann Marie Jablonowski, Owens Community College

Common courtesy has been lost in many of our daily interactions. From cell phone disruptions to text messaging, the iPod generation has become so immersed in technology that they have forgotten to be civil to one another. This roundtable discussion will provide an overview of the challenges that we, as communication educators, face with a lack of civility in our classrooms and in daily communication. The session will focus on course policies and activities aimed at improving civility.

“MINNESOTA NICE:” CO-CULTURAL VALUES AND COMMUNICATION BEHAVIORS

Sponsor: Intercultural Communication
Chair: Margaret Pryately, St. Cloud State University

Participants:
Bassey Eyo, St. Cloud State University
Joanna Pucel, St. Cloud State University
Margaret Pryately, St. Cloud State University

This study has evolved from responses by over 800 St. Cloud State University students to surveys designed to assess their learning in the basic communication course. The students’ preferred manner of expressing themselves was indicative of the shared co-cultural values of “Minnesota Nice” which is in opposition to the widely held notion of American individualism. From these responses the participants have investigated definitions of “Minnesota Nice,” its positive and negative aspects, and how the communication values associated with being “Minnesota Nice” are manifested in behaviors in the classroom and workplace.

COGNITIVE AND AFFECTIVE PROCESSES IN INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION: THEMES AND TOPICS

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication
Chair: Susanne Jones, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

Participants:

“Now you are about to enjoy the excitement of your heart in public! The role of positive affect and metaphors in reducing speech anxiety.” Eusoon Lee, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

“Emotional deception in the context of interrogations.” Linda Freeman, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

“Attachment orientation as a moderator of the influence of peer communication on adolescents’ parent-child emotional disclosure schema updating.” Naomi Kagawa, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

“Who’s got to say what you do? The influence of parents, peers, and the media on adolescents’ sexual attitudes and behaviors of adolescents.” Alyssa Isaacs, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

Respondent: Ascan Koerner, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
Examining cognitive and affective processes in interpersonal communication continue to be one of the most important topic areas in interpersonal communication. Of course, cognition is central to the message production process. There has been a particular upsurge of empirical research and theory development that examines the interface between emotion and cognition and its influence on message production across various contexts, including family communication, social support, deception, and small group communication. Work of this nature is important because it integrates both affective and cognitive processes and addresses criticism that research has focused on cognition to the exclusion of emotion. Implicitly, the panel is concerned with the question “What is the role of cognition and emotion in interpersonal communication?”

LESSON STUDY PLAN FOR THE PUBLIC ORAL COMMUNICATION COURSE

Sponsor: Undergraduate Programs
Chair: James E. Putz, University of Wisconsin-La Crosse
Participants:
James E. Putz, University of Wisconsin-La Crosse
Thomas D. Reinert, University of Wisconsin-La Crosse
Becky Belter, Jackson Community College, Michigan

The University of Wisconsin-La Crosse offers approximately seventy-five sections of the introductory communication class. One activity common to all sections is a library indoctrination session. Using the Lesson Study model, members from the Communication Studies Department and library staff modified the library indoctrination class. Lesson Study is a collaborative teaching improvement activity, in which a small group of instructors plans, teaches, observes, and revises a single lesson for a course. The Lesson Study group met to identify the desired outcomes of the library session, evaluate the current lesson, suggest modifications to the current plan and create a new plan.

SHIFTING FROM A MASS TO DIGITAL COMMUNICATION PERSPECTIVE

Sponsor: Media Studies
Chair: James W. Chesebro, Ball State University

Participants:
“Life as a screenager: Wearing video in S-M-L-XL sizes.” Michael Holmes, Ball State University
“Bowling with millions: An examination of how community is effected by virtual communication.” Nicholas W. Geidner, Ball State University
“Sold – the cost of advertising, happiness and self-esteem.” Rodney M. Smith, Ball State University
“A transformation in the basic media configuration: From the traditional mass communication scheme to the new digital reconfiguration.” James W. Chesebro, Ball State University

The participants on this program are unified by a common interest in exploring a media paradigm shift from mass to digital communication. Four different perspectives are employed to characterize this shift. Operating from a common research perspective, these four papers track some dramatic transformations in the nature of media systems and research about these systems.

EASING THE STRESS AND STRAIN: AN EXAMINATION OF FORENSIC EDUCATORS AS AT-RISK PROFESSIONALS AND STRATEGIES FOR COPING

Sponsor: Central States Advisory Council—State of Missouri Showcase Program

Participants:
Scott Jensen, Webster University
Peggy Dersch, Parkway West High School, Missouri

There is a great deal of evidence that frames forensic education as an at-risk part of the speech education profession. The presenters bring their combined 45 years of coaching and teaching at both high school and collegiate levels together for this examination of challenges that face forensic educators. This program examines the contemporary face of forensic education, highlighting factors that contribute to the at-risk nature of the profession. Causes for these factors are discussed. Additionally, strategies for coping and growing professional as an educator are also shared.

JUDGING DEBATES FOR THE FIRST TIME: EXPERIENCES WITH THE DETROIT URBAN DEBATE LEAGUE

Sponsor: Argumentation and Forensics
Chair: Tom Lietz, Wayne State University
Participants:
- Patricia Kemp, Wayne State University
- Denise L. Oles, Wayne State University
- Ricardo Perez, Wayne State University
- Ben Ulhman, Wayne State University
Respondent: Katherine Lavelle, Drake University

This panel will discuss their experiences judging competitive high school debates for the first time during a Detroit Urban Debate League competition. The participants will discuss the challenges of judging for the first time as well as what benefit each of them gained from the experience as well as what kind of feedback they can provide to the debaters.

POLITICS IN THE CLASSROOM, DEFINING ACADEMIC FREEDOMS AND LIMITS: A POINT/COUNTERPOINT DISCUSSION

Co-Sponsors: Freedom and Responsibilities of Speech
Political Communication
Chair: Larry Underberg, Southeast Missouri State University
Participants:
- Michael Bauer, Ball State University
- Venessa Bowers, Ivy Tech State College-Lafayette
- Darryl Clark, University of Indianapolis
- Sarah Bonewits Feldner, Marquette University
- Larry Lambert, Indiana University South Bend
- Krista Longtin, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
- Ian Sheeler, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
- Kristina Horn Sheeler, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
This panel continues conversation from previous conventions about political discussion and freedom of speech in university classrooms, by examining opposing viewpoints on questions such as: the existence of a liberal bias in academe, the politics involved in selecting guest speakers, the limits of civility, and other issues related to academic freedom in communication classrooms. This panel will begin with a series of short point/counterpoint presentations followed by an open discussion with the audience.

STUDENT RETENTION AT COMMUNITY COLLEGES: AN INVITATION TO IMPROVEMENT

Sponsor: Community College

Participants:
David L. Bodary, Sinclair Community College
Ed Schwarz, Prairie State Community College

Faculty members at all levels of higher education have a social responsibility to improve student retention. In this dialogue session the problem of student retention will be framed with a brief overview of the literature on this topic. Session participants will then be invited to share their perspectives and best practices for retaining students in Communication courses. The group will be encouraged to develop a set of retention recommendations for faculty teaching Communication courses at two-year, open enrollment institutions.

FINDING COMMON GROUND BETWEEN SOMALI AND EURO-AMERICAN HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS IN CENTRAL MINNESOTA

Sponsor: Intercultural Communication
Chair: Roseanna Ross, St. Cloud State University

Participants:
“Violent and prejudiced actions: Experiences of Somali high school students in Central Minnesota.” Eddah Mutua-Kombo, St. Cloud State University
“Adolescent prejudice: Causes, consequences, and cures.” Erika Vora, St. Cloud State University
“Performance as a non-threatening way to trigger discussion of possible racially-motivated incidents.” Marge Pryately, St. Cloud State University
“Mediation as a way of addressing cultural differences.” Jeff Ringer, St. Cloud State University

Respondent: Peter Nwosu, California State University, Northridge

In Central Minnesota, racial tensions among culturally diverse high school students have resulted in acts of violence and prejudice that create a culture of fear and distrust, indifference and lack of respect for diversity. These experiences have called for concerted efforts in the community to engage in activities that promote peaceful co-existence with the new immigrant communities. The panelists will discuss their contribution to creating a climate of acceptance, respect and tolerance in two local high schools.

LOCAL ISSUES, LOCAL AUDIENCES: FOSTERING SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT IN PUBLIC SPEAKING STUDENTS BY DEVELOPING LOCAL CONTEXTS FOR RHETORICAL COMPONENTS

Sponsor: Basic Course
Chair: Joel Friederich, University of Wisconsin-Barron County

Participants:
H. Gene Biby, University of Wisconsin-Rock County
Tricia Clasen, University of Wisconsin-Rock County
Joel Friederich, University of Wisconsin-Barron County
Mary Hoeft, University of Wisconsin-Barron County
Barry Liss, University of Wisconsin-Marathon County

This roundtable focuses on how placing rhetorical components in local contexts can foster students’ engagement with social issues in the basic course. Topics will include an exploration of students’ perspectives on local Native American communities; the development of local audiences for student speeches; the use of local sources to encourage safe debate; the impact of localized research methods, such as interviewing, on students’ engagement; and the consideration of classical rhetorical texts in a local community.

LEARNING WAYS TO APPLY THE “PRIVACY DIAGNOSTIC TOOL”

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication
Chair: Sandra Petronio, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis

Participants:
Sandra Petronio, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
Jennifer Reierson, North Dakota State University
Tennley Vik, North Dakota State University
Julie Semlak, North Dakota State University
Jean Ostrom-Blonigen, North Dakota State University

The format of this interactive panel invites the audience to collaboratively diagnose cases after a brief introduction to the main concepts of the Privacy Management Diagnostic Tool. Presenters will then introduce the cases and offer some initial guidance in diagnosing the dilemmas presented. Once the audience receives this information, they will break into small groups for a short period and work on diagnosing the cases with the presenters’ assistance. The audience will reconvene and discuss the issues related to the cases together as a group.

NEW PERSPECTIVES ON SUPPORTIVE COMMUNICATION

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication
Chair: Brant R. Burleson, Purdue University

Participants:
“Retrospective accounts of helpful and unhelpful esteem support messages.” Amanda J. Holmstrom, Purdue University
“Cognitive dynamics in the emotional support process: A new perspective.” Susanne M. Jones, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities
“Romantic relationship change, face threats, and face support: A measurement and structural model.” Jessica J. Rack, Purdue University, and Steven R. Wilson, Purdue University, and Adrianne Kunkel, University of Kansas
“Cultural variations in beliefs about the appropriateness and function of avoidance as a form of social support provision.” Hairong Feng, University of Minnesota, Duluth

Considerable research indicates that supportive communication from caring others contributes to the well-being of recipients in several ways, increasing their ability to cope with problematic situations, reducing emotional distress, improving the quality of interpersonal relationships, and even enhancing physical and mental health. To date, most of the research examining supportive messages in the communication discipline has focused on either emotional support (comforting messages) or informational support (advice messages). Although important, these are only two of the several different types of supportive communication. The papers composing this panel either explore types of supportive messages that have received little attention to date (e.g., esteem support, avoidance as a type of support) or provide fresh theoretical perspectives on more frequently studied support forms (emotional support, face support).

COMMUNICATING RESPONSIBLY WITH NATIVE AMERICANS: ON VARYING PERCEPTIONS OF CRISIS AND RISK

Sponsor: Public Relations
Chair: Timothy L. Sellnow, North Dakota State University

Participants:
Robert S. Littlefield, North Dakota State University
Kimberly Cowden, North Dakota State University
Leander R. McDonald, Planning Director, Spirit Lake Nation, Fort Totten, ND
Joyce Sayler, Women’s Way Coordinator for Custer District Health Unit, Mandan, ND
Elaine Keeps Eagle, Community Health Representative, Standing Rock Sioux Nation

Native Americans represent hundreds of the components in the multicultural population that comprises the United States. However, when risk and crisis messages are forthcoming from figures at various levels of authority, the cultures represented in the United States often are not reflected in the messages that are created, nor in the way those messages are transmitted. This roundtable discussion brings together Native and non-native scholars and health communication professionals to discuss varying perceptions of crisis and risk among members of four tribal groups in the upper Great Plains and lessons learned about responsibly communicating risk and crisis with Native Americans.

Participants:

Christa Brown, Minnesota State University
Kristin Treinen, Minnesota State University
Kathleen Crawford, Minnesota State University

This panel will examine stereotypes, myths and common perceptions of mothers in modern day society. Derogatory terms containing mother create a lack of respect; glorified images of mothers create unrealistic expectations. Mothers face stereotypes of being lazy or uncaring depending upon whether they work or stay home, causing all mothers to constantly face feelings of guilt. Popular press titles about motherhood include words such as “manifesto,” “madness” and “wars.” We ask: When did mother become a dirty word?

Chair:  Deanna Sellnow, North Dakota State University

Participants:
Arnold Shapiro, Academy Award-winning and Emmy-winning Filmmaker and Producer

Television is the ultimate communications medium and Arnold Shapiro has spent four decades as one of its more successful and ethical producers. Using film clips from his productions as well as his experience as a “broadcast communicator” and leader (which is what producers are), Arnold will offer his perspectives on effective communication, ethical leadership, and the making a positive difference in the lives of others – in a presentation that is both visually and emotionally compelling.

While words like “ethics” and “integrity” are not usually associated with a Hollywood producer, Arnold is one of the exceptions. His stories of trying to combine success with integrity offer both insight and humor. But with 16 Emmys, an Academy Award, and over 100 other awards, Arnold has proven that it’s possible (but not always easy) to be successful and honorable in the same lifetime.

ARGUMENTATION AND SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY:
CREATING AND EVALUATING SITES OF PUBLIC DISCOURSE

Sponsor: Argumentation and Forensics
Chair: Heather Norton, Fontbonne University

Participants:
“Cross-fire as cross-roads.” Joseph Sora, Duquesne University
“The fundamentals of argumentation.” Larry Underberg, Southeast Missouri State University
“Real opportunities for civic engagement: Alternative to competitive intercollegiate speech and debate activities.” Steve Martin, Ripon College
“Walking the line: The practical and political challenges of fostering civic engagement.” Heather Norton, Fontbonne University

This panel/discussion features educators who have created and considered locations where pedagogy meets the public. It explores the ways that the participants have structured their classrooms and forensics programs to establish sites of connection between their students and the public, examines how political proclivities might influence or shape their experience at those sites, and finally considers the opportunities and challenges inherent in preparing students to continue their use of argumentation skills beyond their university experience.

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN POLITICS:
COMMUNICATION AND THE U.S. IMMIGRATION DEBATE

Co-Sponsors: Political Communication
CSCA First Vice President, Jack Kay
Chair: Jay P. Childers, University of Kansas
Participants:
Alberto Gonzalez, Bowling Green State University
Mitchell S. McKinney, National Communication Association
Jennifer Willis-Rivera, University of Wisconsin, River Falls

This panel will explore the on-going immigration “debate” in U.S. politics. Panelists will place the debate within a historical context and will then examine the communication of various political actors regarding the issues surrounding the immigration debate. Audience participation will be encouraged as we discuss ways in which political communication scholars can foster social responsibility for clear communication within this political hot topic.

FRAMING SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY: MEDIA AND ITS IMPLICATIONS
Sponsor: Media Studies
Chair: Ahmet Atay, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale

Participants:
“Framing the event/framing the deviant: Critical examination of media framing.” Ahmet Atay, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
“The zero degree of violence.” Jay Brower, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
“Framing Keith Ellison: Media coverage of an African-American Muslim congressional candidate.” Terrence Check, St. John’s University
“Tonight romance! Tomorrow regret!” Dave Nelson, University of Southern Mississippi

Since media continue to set the agenda for American society, framing remains one of the most crucial media theories that researchers use. Media framing theory functions as a critical lens for theorists to understand the power of media and the complex relationships between media images and audiences. This panel examines media representations of key social events as a means of explicating communication theory.

PROMOTING SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN THE BASIC COURSE THROUGH CRITICAL COMMUNICATION PEDAGOGY
Critical communication pedagogy—as a philosophy of teaching, a classroom practice and a research methodology—asks us to work together with our students to explore how communication functions to create, sustain and challenge social inequities such as racism, sexism or homophobia. Panelists from a variety of different academic positions (e.g., graduate teaching assistants, professors from multiple levels, GTA supervisors, researchers in critical communication pedagogy, etc.), including the authors of the new SAGE volume Critical Communication Pedagogy, will share their own successes and challenges in engaging in this socially responsible oriented work.

Margaret Pryately, St. Cloud State University
Diana Rehling, St. Cloud State University
Roseanna Ross, St. Cloud State University
Erika Vora, St. Cloud State University
Paula Tompkins, St. Cloud State University

By all accounts incivility in the classroom is on the rise. Six experienced educators who have been studying the topic come together for a roundtable discussion to examine the issues related to this growing problem. They will address such questions as how to define incivility, what is contributing to incivility, and how might we, as classroom teachers and as departments, address it. This session will be highly interactive and we invite both experienced educators as well as new teaching assistants to come and join the discussion.

FLYING SOLO: GRADUATE STUDENTS TEACHING UPPER-LEVEL COURSES

Co-Sponsors:  Communication Education

Chair:  Christina L. Ross, University of North Dakota

Participants:
Jim Abbott, University of North Dakota
Zachary Frohlich, Tarrant County College
Ronald Hochstatter, University of North Dakota
David Kahl Jr., North Dakota State University
Christina Ross, University of North Dakota
Jessica Samens, Minnesota State University Mankato
Graduate students often receive opportunities to teach upper-level courses in the area(s) of their interest and expertise. While these opportunities can be beneficial in giving students experience and diversity, they can also create additional stress. Unlike teaching the basic course, which is often overseen by a qualified faculty member and accompanied by training, teaching upper-level courses tend to mean the student is on his/her own. As such, students must design their own course, plan daily activities, lectures, and exams, and familiarize themselves with a new textbook while also maintaining focus on graduate studies. This panel comprises students who have all had such experiences, teaching a wide range of courses in Interpersonal Communication, Oral Interpretation, Psychology of Communication, Small Group Communication, Business and Professional Speaking, and Internships at a variety of different institutions. Panelists will share advice for other graduate students and faculty teaching a course for the first time. Topics will include consulting available resources, finding a mentor, coping with stress, and maintaining focus on academic work.

“Crash spectacle: The (mis)representation of NASCAR through stock images.” Denise L. Oles, Wayne State University

Respondent: Sandy Pensoneau-Conway, Wayne State University

Visual culture saturates the world and is emerging within academia as an area of study that investigates the means for examining and reconsidering how things are looked at culturally through a historical combination of meanings and subjects. Visual culture is historical based on the acknowledgment that the visual image is not constant but changing as its relation changes to external stimuli at particular times. This panel will examine the impact of visual images depicted in the mass media as a mechanism for influencing how we make sense of our surroundings through multiple representations and the impact these images have on our culture’s ideologies.

Sponsor: Community College
Chair: Ron Howell, Illinois Central College

Participants:
Debbie Hedemann, Illinois Central College
Ann Marie Jablonowski, Owens Community College
Angie McNaught, Illinois Central College

The Community College movement has always been a democratic effort to provide wider opportunities for higher education. For faculty, that means new innovations in teaching are needed to address the many students who need considerable remedial help to be able to perform in college-level courses. This roundtable discussion will center on ways the community college can offer creative course-work and diverse types of assistance from staff and faculty to give remedial students the best opportunity to succeed in the classroom.

Ethical predicaments within communication evolve from misunderstandings. Ethics are created through our learned social behaviors and we pass those ethical values to others through our social experiences. Because notions of moral standards vary from relationship to relationship, the line between what is ethical and what is immoral is not clear, but instead it is blurred. This roundtable discussion examines how ethical lines are no longer right or wrong, but are open to interpretation.

COPING WITH THE PROBLEM STUDENT:
MANAGING STUDENTS WHO REFUSE TO ACCEPT RESPONSIBILITY

Sponsor: Instructional Resources
Chair: Tammy French, University of Wisconsin-Whitewater
Participants:
Amy Capwell Burns, University of Toledo

Lauren Gregg, Wayne State University
Stephanie Rolain-Jacobs, University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh
Fatima Shousher, University of Toledo

Creating socially responsible students and a supportive climate in the classroom continue to be important goals for educators. Unfortunately, we occasionally have students who create distractions through inappropriate behavior. Using case studies, four faculty members, a doctoral candidate, and an undergraduate student will examine varying types of disruptive student behavior, discuss the outcomes, and offer suggestions for coping with “problem” students. In these situations, responsible actions can offer opportunities to create connections with lifelong learners.

Since teaching intercultural communication from critical perspectives requires more responsibility and sensitivity, as scholars it is our goal to generate debates, organize networks, and share stories, sorrows, and joys of this responsibility. This panel seeks to generate a scholarly discussion about teaching critical intercultural communication from the trenches; therefore, our vision is to build a healthy network to discuss our teaching and our approaches to critical issues and theories in intercultural communication. Furthermore we bring our own stories and positionalities into this discourse.

TEACHING “GENERATION NEXTERS” EFFECTIVELY: SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF BASIC COURSE EDUCATORS

Sponsor: Basic Course
Chair: Nicole J. Schultz, Bowling Green State University
Recent civic engagement, service learning, and active learning efforts have improved the rigor of pedagogical practices and student engagement in the basic course. However, these efforts to enhance student learning are not typically grounded in assumptions about students of the NeXt Generation who represent the majority of our classrooms. This panel will focus on providing basic course educators with suggestions for working with students of the NeXt Generation.

Participants:
“Guilty pleasure in Passions: Out of tune in harmony and singing its praises.” Jessie Stewart, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
“‘Is anyone else totally P’d that T & E are having sex again?’ Constructing ownership of Passions in cyberspace.” Samantha P. McKelvie, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
“Unpacking Simone: A soap opera lesbian goes to camp.” Andrew J. Kirk, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
“Opening Endora’s Box: performing ‘Witch’ on NBC’s Passions.” Emily Kelly-Padden, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale

The soap opera genre has a long storied history in American media studies, but it receives little attention today. The newest addition to the daytime landscape, NBC’s Passions, has attracted media attention for its outrageous content and young fan base, but rarely does that attention extend beyond the popular press. We would like to change that. Our interest in Passions involves general notions of what soap operas continue to teach us about societal trends and media influences.

BEYOND THE CLASSROOM: BASIC COURSE AND CIVIC ENGAGEMENT

Sponsor: Basic Course
Chair: Kristen P. Treinen, Minnesota State University Mankato

Participants:
Derrick Lindstrom, College of Saint Benedict/St. John’s University
Karyl Daughters, College of Saint Benedict/St. John’s University
Sarah Wolter, Gustavus Adolphus College
Jessica Samens, Minnesota State University Mankato
Kathleen Crawford, Minnesota State University Mankato
Amy Wolff, Winona State University

The Basic Course offers a compelling opportunity to introduce students to the notion of civic engagement. Introducing public dialogue as a catalyst for addressing pressing issues in a community is vital knowledge for students to become engaged citizens beyond their years in higher education. This panel addresses requiring public service as a means to teach civic engagement. Panelists will share perspectives of varying degrees of project implementation, from initial ideas to full-fledged assignments, followed by audience participation.

DIALOGIC RESEARCH IN THE RESEARCH OF DIALOGUE: POSSIBILITIES, PROBLEMS, PRACTICE

Sponsor: Communication Theory
Chair: M. Chad McBride, Creighton University

Participants:
Karla Mason Bergen, College of Saint Mary
Karen L. Daas, Saint Mary’s University
Lynn M. Harter, Ohio University
Phyllis M. Japp, University of Nebraska-Lincoln
Dialogism as a meta-perspective/theoretical construct has gained currency across the communication discipline. As all theory, a dialogic perspective should inform the way we do research.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE HOPE CONFERENCE FOR FACULTY DEVELOPMENT

Sponsor: Undergraduate Programs
Chair: Deborrah Uecker, Wisconsin Lutheran College

Participants:
“The impact of cell phone use on the possibilities of dialogue.” Isolde Anderson, Hope College
“I wonder if dialogue can help the department chair? A practical application.” Deborrah Uecker, Wisconsin Lutheran College
“Teaching dialogue in an e-mail project between Russia and the U.S.” Jackie Schmidt, John Carroll University

This panel showcases the types of collaborative projects that emerge for attendees to the Hope Conference for Faculty Development. For the past five years the conference has been held at Luther College in Decorah, Iowa. This year it moves to Randolph Macon College in Virginia. Over the years the conference has been invaluable for faculty to make connections with top scholars and to develop avenues for collaboration for faculty at small schools or from small departments. Presentations of projects that emerged from last year’s conference will be discussed. The projects emerged from attendance at a dialogue seminar conducted by John Stewart.

PROMOTING SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY THROUGH CLASSROOM PROJECTS: A DIALOGUE SESSION ON THE RELATIVE ADVANTAGES/DISADVANTAGES OF SERVICE LEARNING, EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING AND CIVIC ENGAGEMENT

Sponsor: Communication Education
Chair: Judy C. Pearson, North Dakota State University

Participants:
Denise Gorsline, Minnesota State University Moorhead
Elizabeth Tolman, South Dakota State University
Jeffrey T. Child, North Dakota State University
Cassandra LeClair-Underberg, University of Nebraska-Lincoln
Lori DeWitt, North Dakota State University
Najla Amundson, North Dakota State University

The terms “service learning,” “experiential learning,” and “civic engagement” are used frequently, and sometimes, interchangeably. While each often involves interaction with the community outside the university campus, can all be classified as acts of “social responsibility?” Does each format offer the same level of benefit to the community and to the learners? Panelists will explore these questions. Additionally, examples of service learning, experiential learning, and civic engagement will be provided and compared side-by-side.

TRADITIONS, EVOLUTIONS, AND EDUCATIONAL APPLICATIONS IN READER’S THEATRE: A REVIEW OF THE INSTITUTE FOR READER’S THEATRE

Sponsor: Central States Advisory Council—State of Illinois Showcase Program

Participants:
Steve Schroeder, College of DuPage
Bonnie Gabe, McHenry County College
Kathryn Nash, Harold Washington College

The panel will present scripting and staging techniques as taught by the Institute for Reader’s Theatre, whose premise is “everything can be scripted.” This approach demonstrates how reader’s theatre, as a uniquely engaging educational tool, can be applied across disciplines. Additionally, the panel will describe the kinds of grants being given for utilizing reader’s heater to improve reading comprehension.

FACING THE FACEBOOK PHENOMENON:
AN EXPLORATION OF IMPLICATIONS FOR ORGANIZATIONAL PRACTICE

Sponsor: Organizational and Professional Communication
Chair: Sarah Bonewits Feldner, Marquette University

Participants:
Janel Anderson, Thomson Global Product Design
Scott C. D’Urso, Marquette University
Heidi Heyrman, Marquette University
Breanna Kuhn, Corporate Consultant
Joseph Petek, Marquette University
Richard Wood, Marquette University

While most people associate the Facebook site with universities, Facebook has expanded to include corporate networks. This discussion panel seeks to explore the implications of Facebook as it continues to expand. Participants representing various viewpoints including: corporate professionals, students, and faculty will address what they see as the key issues that must be addressed when considering Facebook from an organizational perspective. Following brief presentations, the audience will be invited and encouraged to join the discussion.

Sponsor: Community College
Chair: Ron Howell, Illinois Central College

Participants:
Debbie Hedemann, Illinois Central College
Angie McNaught, Illinois Central College

The community college has a proud heritage of open enrollment and has embraced a diverse student body. Many community colleges do considerable outreach to the community to increase enrollment from diverse populations and couple these efforts with initiatives to diversify their faculty. This roundtable session will explore what constitutes “diversity” and ways community colleges can improve the campus climate to be more inclusive and promote more diverse ways of learning.

THE RIGHT TO DISSENT IN POST 9-11 AMERICA

Co-Sponsors: Freedom and Responsibilities of Speech
Undergraduate Honors Conference
Chair: Joseph J. Hemmer, Jr., Carroll College

Participants:
Prosecution:
Madeline Kissane, Carroll College
Linda May, Carroll College
This program is based on a moot court assignment in Professor Hemmer’s Communication Law class. Students are assigned a hypothetical court case which involves a group of protestors who are arrested and charged with disrupting a pro-Iraqi War assembly of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Students use case law, witnesses, and other forms of evidence to present constructive speeches, rebuttals, and final appeals. The audience (jury) renders a verdict. Everyone discusses the moot court encounter and the issue.

A “SPOTLIGHT” ON EXCELLENCE: TRIED AND TRUE ACTIVITIES FOR TEACHING INTERPERSONAL AND GROUP COMMUNICATION CLASSES

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication
Chair: Leah E. Bryant, DePaul University

Participants:
“Communication is not ‘common cents.’” Leah E. Bryant, DePaul University
“Emotional animals: Creating controversy as a teaching tool in the interpersonal communication classroom.” Jessica J. Eckstein, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
“So you want to make a difference? Making research real by empowering students to apply and implement learned interpersonal theory, concepts, and skills.” Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule, Bethel University

“Networking skills training.” Joy Koesten, University of Kansas

“Keeping on the ball: Teaching elements of systems theory through an experimental activity.” Alexandra Murphy, DePaul University

“Improving listening through public storytelling.” Stephanie S. Rollie, Miami University

Successful teaching can be defined by the extent to which course content is understood and made meaningful to the students’ lives. The following exercises help facilitate the understanding of interpersonal and small group communication course material. Through the application of the course content students can make better communication choices. The activities offered in this spotlight panel can help students understand that in order to be successful communicators, communication skills such as listening, critical thinking, argumentation, and casual conversation require more purposeful thought and planning than just common sense.

FEELINGS OF ISOLATION – ONE YEAR LATER: HAS IT CHANGED?
BLAZING NEW TRAILS FOR WOMEN IN THE ACADEMY

Sponsor: Women’s Caucus
Chair: Sheryl Lidzy, Emporia State University

Participants:
Lynda Dixon, Bowling Green State University
Tracy Frederick, Southwestern College
Phylis Johnson, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
Robin Jones, Southwest Oklahoma State University
Sheryl Lidzy, Emporia State University
Krista Hoffmann-Longtin, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
Christine North, Ohio Northern University

The purpose of this discussion is two-fold: (a) to provide social support for each other as they are currently trailblazing, and (b) to mentor others who are contemplating their own trailblazing endeavors. Each of these participants has experienced feeling of being isolated as they blaze trails in the academy. Some of these have been placed in an “only” position (e.g. “Only Native American”) and searched for others who might mentor them through the process. These communication scholars will continue the panel discussion begun in 2006 of the roles women play in their department, college, building, university, or their community.
SPOTLIGHT PANEL ON STATE JOURNALS

Sponsor: CSCA President, Deanna Sellnow

Co-Chairs: Deborrah Uecker, Wisconsin Lutheran College, Editor, Journal of Wisconsin Communication Association
Nanette Johnson-Curiskis, Minnesota State University Mankato, Editor, Communication & Theatre Association of Minnesota Journal

Participants:
- Robert Littlefield, North Dakota State University, Editor, North Dakota Journal of Speech and Theatre
- Gina Jensen, Webster University, Editor, Journal of the Speech and Theatre Association of Missouri
- Alan Lerstrom, Luther College, Editor, Iowa Journal of Communication

This may be the biggest secret in the Central region! There are state journals that provide additional avenues for scholars to publish their work. These journals are peer reviewed and highlight top quality scholarship in communication and theatre. Editors of state journals in Central will provide information about the editorial policies and submission criteria for their respective state journal. A display table of state journals will also be part of the conference. Conference attendees will have a chance to look at the state journals prior to the panel session and can then ask questions regarding the journals.

DEALING WITH CHALLENGES IN ROMANTIC RELATIONSHIPS

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication

Chair: Steve Duck, University of Iowa

Participants:
- “Perceptions of risk held in dating and marital relationships, and its impact on relational interactions.” Joy Daggs, University of Missouri-Columbia, and Jon A. Hess, University of Missouri-Columbia
- “In your face: Dating partners’ accounts of facework strategies in conflict situations.” Mary Jeanette Smyth, University of Missouri-Columbia
- “The challenges and consequences of emotion expression in close relationships.” Sandra Metts, Illinois State University, Sylvia L. Mikucki, Illinois State University, and Adam C. Smith, Illinois State University
- “The language of love: Linguistic challenges in married people’s conversations about sex.” Jon A. Hess, University of Missouri-Columbia, and Tina A. Coffelt, University of Missouri-Columbia

When people do have to deal with challenges in their relationships, they are most in need of guidance for what to do. Thus, research on how to deal with prominent challenges in romantic relationship has a lot to offer, both in theory development and also in practical application. The papers on this panel address these needs. They examine perceptions people have of risk in their romantic relationships and how those perceptions influence behavior choices, how people maintain face during conflict, the challenges and consequences people experience in expressing emotions, and challenges people face when discussing sexual relations with a partner. Together, these papers address some of the most prominent challenges people face in romantic relationships, and they offer insight into how people manage these problematic issues.

While communication educators frequently warn against using Wikipedia as a supporting resource, many arguments can be made about the viability and utility of the website. This discussion panel explores issues regarding Wikipedia including the reliability of its content; the responsibilities of an open access source of knowledge; the role of educators, researchers, and practitioners in contributing to Wikipedia; and a graduate course project that sought to bring communication theory to the online encyclopedia.

KENNETH BURKE, NARRATIVES, AND HEALTH COMMUNICATION SCHOLARSHIP: A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION
Participants on this roundtable will focus attention on the corpus of Kenneth Burke’s writings as resources for Health Communication Theory and Practice. Collectively, panelists will reclaim the various contours of Burkean theory for health communication scholarship in the 21st century including his work on perspective by incongruity, the four master tropes, piety and impiety, consubstantiality and identification, and motives. Panelists bear witness to how complex health narratives in the midst of larger life and public narratives can frame and define, stigmatize and/or empower, confuse and/or enlighten.

- Ron Pelias, Southern Illinois University-Carbondale
- Sandra Petronio, Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis
- Robert Scott, University of Minnesota
- Matthew Seeger, Wayne State University
- David Zarefsky, Northwestern University

This session provides emerging scholars an opportunity to visit about their research one-on-one or in small groups with our discipline’s distinguished scholars. Attendees should come prepared to share their current research ideas with various scholars or simply come to meet them. Our distinguished scholars will provide insight and offer suggestions for future research.

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN THE GLOBAL CLASSROOM: AN EXPLORATION INTO ISSUES OF TEACHING ABROAD

Sponsor: Communication Education
Moderator: Sarah Bonewits Feldner, Marquette University

Participants:
This panel is composed of faculty members who have taught in France, Greece, Indonesia, Macedonia, Poland, and Russia. Participants will discuss teaching abroad issues, such as: communication barriers, cultural differences in perceptions of cheating/plagiarism, resource issues, cultural differences in perceptions of time, making the most (cultural experience, vacation/recreation) of your time abroad, general tips for teaching abroad that you might not think about, cultural differences in perceptions of student-teacher role expectations, workload expectations, and assessment issues.

Lynda Milne, Minnesota State Colleges & Universities

The National Center for Academic Transformation (NCAT) promotes efforts to leverage technology and other resources so that the delivery of curricula can be more efficient and pedagogically effective. In two separate projects, faculty at St. Cloud State University and Ohio University implemented NCAT initiatives in their basic courses, one a public speaking course and the other an introduction to communication course. This roundtable panel discusses the two initiatives and offers advice to others who may wish to take similar steps on their campuses.

COMMUNICATING COMMON GROUND THROUGH SERVICE LEARNING

Sponsor: Central States Advisory Council—State of Minnesota Showcase Program

Participants:
Pakou Vang, Century College
Michele Neaton, Century College

Service learning is a growing pedagogy in colleges and universities because of the powerful learning that occurs when students engage in community service. What are the benefits of service learning for communication courses and how can we use it to build common ground in our communities? Forging partnerships is the focus of the panel: the “why” and “how” of placing college students in K-12 schools to tutor, mentor, and foster relationships that build common ground.

PROBLEMATIZING ‘DARKNESS’ IN THE DARK SIDE OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Small Group Communication
Chair: Paul Schrodt, Texas Christian University

Participants:
“Reconsidering the dark side: Expanding notions of light and dark in interpersonal communication.” Jimmie Manning, Northern Kentucky University
“Illuminating the ‘dark’ foundations of interpersonal computer-mediated communication.” Kiley Larson, University of Kansas, and Andrew M. Ledbetter, University of Kansas
“From ‘darkness’ to ‘heaviness’: Repositioning our understanding of deception in interpersonal relationships.” Amber S. Messersmith, University of Kansas, and Ryan S. Bisel, University of Kansas
“The dark side of parent communication: The roles in child development.” Stephenson J. Beck, University of Kansas

Respondent: Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule, Bethel University

In the opening chapter of Cupach and Spitzberg’s (1994) initial examination of the “dark side” of interpersonal communication, Duck (1994) challenged communication scholars to avoid simple dichotomous understandings of personal relationships that divide relational behaviors into “positive” and negative” categories. Rather, Duck (1994) encourage future researchers to consider “dark” behaviors as one part of a larger constellation of everyday behaviors that often encompass the totality of relational experience. Consistent with Duck’s (1994) original call, the primary purpose of this panel is to problematize the metaphor of “darkness” be re-considering key constructs that have received increasing attention from communication scholars and “dark side” constructs, but that nevertheless have potentially beneficial and/or positive relational outcomes. After an initial presentation critiquing the social paradigms researchers use to study “dark side” constructs, the remaining presentations offer theoretical and/or empirical consideration necessary for a more complete understanding of three interpersonal constructs: computer-mediated communication, deception, and parental compliance-gaining. Finally, after responses to each presenter, audience member will be invited to participate in theoretical discussion that evaluates the utility of the “dark side” metaphor.

Respondent: Alberto Gonzalez, Bowling Green State University

When programs offer both a Master’s and a Ph.D., top undergraduates may sometimes be overlooked. Yet it can also be assumed that research standards are higher. This panel will honor those undergraduates who deliver research papers that exceed the norm of their peers. NDSU professors selected these papers in a competitive fashion, hoping to encourage students to pursue other outlets for their excellent work and to consider graduate school.

76TH ANNUAL CENTRAL STATES COMMUNICATION ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT'S CEILIURADH

Sponsor: CSCA President, Deanna Sellnow

For the first time in many years, the 2007 CSCA convention actually occurs in March. So, we thought it would be fun to extend a St. Patrick’s Day theme for the President’s Party. Join us for this ceiliuradh (Irish for “celebration”), featuring live music from Poitin: The Wild Irish Band (including Don Rice from Concordia College in Moorhead, Minnesota). Dance instructor, Bonnie Haney, will teach interested folks a few simple Irish dance steps and there will be prizes for best Irish costumes. Don’t forget to wear green! As always, we’ll also enjoy elegant cuisine and a cash bar. Following the ceiliuradh will be an optional and unofficial downtown Minneapolis Irish Pub Crawl.

NEW SCHOLARS’ WORKSHOP II:
CONDUCTING RESEARCH IN A SCHOOL THAT EMPHASIZES TEACHING
Sponsor: CSCA Second Vice President, Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule
Note: NO fee for participation. Attendees should pre-register by March 15. Walk-ons are welcome but will not receive workshop packets.
Chair: Nancy J. (Eckstein) Brule, Bethel University

The majority of Ph.D.’s in the communication discipline teach at state or private universities where the focus is on undergraduate education. These types of schools often require a 3-3 or 4-4 teaching load in addition to advising while still maintaining research requirements for promotion and tenure. This demanding schedule creates unique challenges in providing time for research. Seasoned scholars participating in the workshop have spent their careers teaching in state and private institutions and have been successful in publishing in a manner that has brought them recognition and success in the communication discipline. This workshop will provide practical advice and approaches used by seasoned scholars who have been successful in maintaining an active research agenda.
